Development of media literacy

Media literacy is a fundamental requirement in order to enjoy an active and self-determined life in the media societies. However, the promoting, or alternatively, restricting factors in the development of media literacy are up to now, to a great extent, still unclear. For adolescents, their peer group, the family and the school are the major socialisation channels and life contexts which serve to educate in the area of media literacy. Dissertation projects in this field should examine the development factors affecting media literacy and carry out research on what adolescents perceive as a "Good Life" in the media society.
